

AbsoluteClimo's Long Lead 2024 Hurricane Season Risk Forecast of U.S. Gulf Corridor Hurricane Landfalls Verifies as Correct

HONOLULU (20 September 2024) - With only a measly seven named tropical cyclones in the North Atlantic ocean basin this season to date, AbsoluteClimo's long lead above normal 2024 hurricane season risk forecast of landfalling U.S. hurricanes for the corridor of states facing just the Gulf of Mexico (Texas through Alabama) has already verified as correct with two hurricane landfalls this season to date.

Beryl landfalled Texas on July 8th 2024 as a Category 1 strength hurricane and Francine landfalled Louisiana on September 11th 2024 as a marginal Cat 2 strength hurricane.

Our 2024 probabilistic forecast, generated by our independent and proprietary global climate physics and catastrophe machine learning models (GOTCHA and ClimoCats), expected a 37% probability of above normal hurricane landfalls in this corridor, including above normal tail risk of landfalls. Our immutable (unchanging) long lead 2024 forecast is non-repudiated with a Q1 2024 timestamped record in a public library.
